Speaker - The UTAS profiled Professor David Howells as a highly regarded world leader "on preclinical stroke research". He is a Professor in Neurosciences and Brain Plasticity for the School of Medicine. Prof Howells spoke to us about stroke and his work in tackling this disease / condition. Annually, stroke kills millions of people but since the 1950's, and with ever improving treatments, stroke deaths have fallen by 70%. However, millions are still affected by stroke with a range of adverse conditions including memory loss, mood problems, cognitive damage, movement impairment or loss. Stroke is the result of constricted "fuel" supply to the brain which is such a highly complex organ which scientists are still battling to understand. Prof Howells answered many questions including about his own personal background, his research work, stroke symptoms, stroke treatments and the difficulties associated with brain research. In thanking Prof. Howells, Tanya D. reminded members of the importance of donating to research or volunteering to be involved in clinical trials.

Is it FAIR to all concerned?
